The Four Phases of Atkins

Induction Diet

Ongoing Weight Loss \(OWL\)

Pre-Maintenance

Maintenance

ONE OF THE vice presidents of Tufts posed the following questions. Is it possible to do the Atkins diet healthfully? And if not, is there a way to tweak the low-carbohydrate plan to make it more nutritious for those people who want to try it to lose weight?

With Dr. Atkins' New Diet Revolution on the New York Times bestseller list for six and a half years straight with no sign of its sales letting up, we thought the answers to those questions would be more than timely. So we ploughed through the book--again--to see whether there was any way to reconcile Dr. Atkins's weight-loss instructions with the principles of good nutrition accepted by the health-promoting community at large.

The most logical way to approach the project, it seemed, was to devise menus based on Dr. Atkins's advice for the four phases of his plan--Induction, Ongoing Weight Loss, Pre-Maintenance, and Maintenance--and then see where adjustments could be made. It was not easy. As anyone with even a passing familiarity of the Atkins diet knows, there are no calorie restrictions, so deciding on amounts of various foods to include in the menus is something of an arbitrary decision. And the sample menus included in the back of Dr. Atkins's book are of no help because they don't jibe with the instructions in the text. For instance, the text says that by the time someone is up to the Maintenance phase, he or she may be able to enjoy up to three "deviations" a week, a deviation being anything from a serving of fruit to a couple of slices of whole-wheat bread to a baked potato. (All get most of their calories from carbohydrates.) But the "Typical Maintenance Menu" almost 100 pages later shows at least four or five deviations on a single day: half a cantaloupe, French onion soup (which tends to come with a thick slice of bread floating at the top), half a small baked potato, veal chops that are lightly breaded (the breading is made from carbohydrates), and a "generous cup" of fruit compote.

In the end, we decided to construct menus for the four phases that contained 1,800 calories each. That seemed like a reasonable calorie allotment for most people wanting to lose weight, including women, as long as they consistently logged a half hour to an hour of exercise each day.

Then we got stuck. The book is adamant in its instructions to avoid certain foods. The first phase--the 14-day Induction Diet that people are supposed to start with--contains "no fruit, bread, grains, starchy vegetables, or dairy products other than cheese, cream, or butter." That means no milk or yogurt, no whole-wheat breads or cereals. And that, in turn, means no easy sources of calcium or vitamin D or whole-wheat phytochemicals that researchers are discovering may play a role in warding off illnesses such as heart disease and diabetes. Dr. Atkins does say to take a multivitamin, but the formula he recommends contains no calcium and too little vitamin D to meet anyone's needs. And it doesn't have any of the fiber or other chemicals contained in whole wheat.

The next phase, Ongoing Weight Loss, or OWL, is more lenient, but readers are still warned that fruit-eating will "always" be "somewhat risky." And Pre-Maintenance, the last two or three months "to

The power of secrets

By Anna Mulrine

Hammurabi's headquarters was a hive of activity around 1800 B.C., but one palace department saw most of the action. It was the king's intelligence agency, where captured tablets offered glimpses of the goings-on among neighboring tribes and far-flung military foes. Ancient analysts sorted through tips from market gossips, wandering entertainers, and chatty refugees. Even the queen filed reports. It was here in the heart of Mesopotamia that the most ancient of civilizations created the first classified document. "This is a secret tablet," an official had etched. It was a death warrant, perhaps for a palace mole. "If there is a ditch in the countryside or in the city," it reads, "make this man disappear."

Spying is a pursuit as old as civilization and a craft long practiced by the most skilled and treacherous of strategists. In the wake of 9/11 and amid looming showdowns with Iraq and North Korea, intelligence gathering is at the center of a debate over the rights of the individual and the needs of national security. And it is an issue that grows ever more urgent as the Department of Homeland Security prepares to open its doors this month in the largest reorganization of American government since Harry Truman signed the National Security Act half a century ago.

These are, of course, considerations that never much concerned the ancients. Sun Tzu and Machiavelli, masters of the spying game both, advised leaders to use espionage liberally. "Though fraud in other activities be detestable," Machiavelli wrote, "in the management of war it is laudable and glorious." The skills of tradecraft are praised by less likely sources as well. The Kama Sutra touts the virtues of secret writing; indeed, seduction and spying have long gone hand in hand. While Casanova is widely remembered as a flirt, he was also an intelligence asset in the service of King Louis XV.

Whorehouse, safe house. The Bible registers few qualms about espionage and chronicles the mingling of the two oldest professions in the book of Joshua. Rahab was a working woman with a small establishment in the red-light district of Jericho. Joshua sent spies to scope out the land, and she hid them. Thus, her brothel became perhaps the first safe house of record.

Spying was so prevalent in ancient Rome that the Greeks assumed that pretty much any time the Romans sent a diplomat to their soil, he was suspect. That might explain why the Greeks used the word for spies--kataskopoi--interchangeably with the word for diplomats, notes Col. Rose Mary Sheldon, an expert in ancient espionage at Virginia Military Institute. In hot pursuit of secrets, noble families spent a great deal of their time surreptitiously surveilling their fellow citizens. "Each senatorial family had its own private intelligence network," explains Sheldon. "No one group would have sanctioned the creation of a single intelligence organization that might fall into the hands of a rival faction."

But it would be state agencies like communist East Germany's secret police, the Stasi, that would take citizen-to-citizen spying to a high art. When West German government agents broke into the Stasi

August in Georgia History

Although no one is certain who made the first discovery or when, the first documented evidence of gold in north Georgia is found in the August 1, 1829, issue of the Milledgeville newspaper Georgia Journal. While the trial of Leo Frank continued through August 1913, it was during the night of August 16, 1915, that Frank was lynched by a mob in Marietta.

On August 30, 1961, Atlanta peacefully integrated its public schools under the leadership of Mayor William B. Hartsfield. Also this month, on August 28, 1963, Martin Luther King Jr. gave his famous "I Have a Dream" speech during the March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom.

Dr. Betty L. Siegel became the first woman president in the University System of Georgia when she was chosen to head Kennesaw State University in August 1981.

Notable birthdays this month include writer Conrad Aiken (1889-1973), two-term governor George Busbee (1927-2004), former first lady Rosalynn Carter (b. 1927), writer Caroline Miller (1903-1992), former governor Herman Talmadge (1913-2002), and athlete Wyomia Tyus (b. 1945).

Since 1950 Hiwassee has hosted its annual Georgia Mountain Fair in mid-August.

This Week In Black History

◀ Thurgood Marshall became the first Black solicitor general when the Senate confirmed his nomination on this day. The U.S. solicitor general argues cases on behalf of the government before the U.S. Supreme Court. Marshall was born in Baltimore on July 2, 1908. He graduated from Howard University Law School in 1933 and was admitted to the Maryland bar that same year. Marshall practiced in Baltimore for several years before he became a chief legal officer of the NAACP. He was part of the legal team that won the landmark 1954 U.S. Supreme Court case Brown vs. Board of Education that struck down segregation in public schools. Marshall served as solicitor general until

Abstract (Article Summary)

"Sports like gymnastics and badminton bring an even greater aura of respect and credibility to our community. Anaheim is an international tourist destination, and a sport like badminton is an international sport."

More than 220 million people worldwide play badminton, but the sport has never really expanded beyond backyard barbecues in the United States. About 10 million play the sport in this country, but an American has never won a medal at the World Championships or the Olympic Games, which have included badminton since 1992.

If there is a hotbed of badminton in this country, it's probably Orange County, where the U.S. Badminton Championships have been held since the mid-1990s. The Orange County Badminton Club in Orange -- the largest badminton-only facility in North, South or Central America and one of three badminton clubs in Southern California -- has 200 full-time members and more than 2,000 part-time members.

Anaheim is taking its title as a sports capital of the United States seriously. Apparently a World Series champion and a Stanley Cup runner-up didn't give the city enough credibility, so it has added gymnastics,

August 2004

What's New for August

DURING THE DOG DAYS, READ ABOUT DOGS!

Of course, the dog days of August are not really about dogs, but about the heat that the Romans believed was caused by the conjunction of the Dog Star, Sirius, with the sun, from early July to mid-August. There's never a bad time to read dog stories though, so why not stretch out in your hammock with some of the books suggested by Andrea Bittle in Dogs: A Reader's Best Friend?

NOT JUST DOGS

For the athletic reader, the Olympic Games will have some people signing up for gymnastics classes and others simply glued to their television sets. Either way, there's some good reading out there in Heidi Estrin's article, Let the Games Begin. For the more domestically-inclined, her new article about gardening offers some opportunity for outdoor fun: Books and Blooms: Stories about Flower Gardening.

Traveling to someplace besides Greece? Check out the latest installment in the Fiction from the 50 States series: Washington, Idaho and Oregon.

And for those who are already thinking about starting school, Susie Wilde's new article, Off to School, will help parents, teachers, and their young'uns cope with that big event.

OLYMPUS BECKONS!

The events in Athens will surely inspire people to read more about Greece. David Wright has provided an article that lists fiction for a variety of tastes: "History . . . Her Story . . . Mystery . . ." and "Myth." Greek to Me includes both time-tested and very current novels set in ancient Greece or inspired by the classics.

Providing an even wider variety of choices, NovelList presents three more new articles about Adult level fiction:

Booklist Review: /*Starred Review*/ Gr. 7-12. At the start of the Civil War two mysterious young women get off a boat in a small town in southern Illinois, and 15-year-old Tilly Pruitt's mother takes them in. Who are they? Is the darker-complexioned woman the other woman's slave? Tilly's twin brother, Noah, falls in love with one of them--rich, stylish, worldly Delphine, who shows Tilly a world of possibilities beyond her home. When Noah runs away to war, Tilly and Delphine go after him, find him in the horror of an army tent hospital, and bring him back; but their world is changed forever. Peck's spare writing has never been more eloquent than in this powerful mystery in which personal secrets drive the plot and reveal the history. True to Tilly's first-person narrative, each sentence is a scrappy, melancholy, wry evocation of character, time, and place, and only the character of Delphine's companion, Calinda, comes close to stereotype. A final historical note and a framing device--a grandson writing 50 years after the story takes place--make the reading even better, the revelations more astonishing. It's a riveting story that shows racism

Biography
More by Richard Peck

Richard Peck

"I spent the first eighteen years of my life in Decatur, Illinois, a middle-American town in a time when teenagers were considered guilty until proven innocent, which is fair enough. My mother read to me before I could read to myself, and so I dreamed from the start of being a writer in New York. But Decatur returned to haunt me, becoming the "Bluff City" of my four novels starring Alexander Armistead and Blossom Culp. When I was young, we were never more than five minutes from the nearest adult, and that solved most of the problems I write about for a later generation living nearer the edge. The freedoms and choices prematurely imposed upon young people today have created an entire literature for them. But then novels are never about people living easy lives through tranquil times; novels are the biographies of survivors.

"I went to college in Indiana and then England, and I was a soldier in Germany -- a chaplain's assistant in Stuttgart -- ghost-writing sermons and hearing more confessions than the clergy. In Decatur we'd been brought up to make a living and not to take chances, and so I became an English teacher, thinking this was as close to the written word as I'd be allowed to come. And it was teaching that made a writer out of me. I found my future readers right there in the roll book. After all, a novel is about the individual within the group, and that's how I saw young people every day, as their parents never do. In all my novels, you have to declare your independence from your peers before you can take that first real step toward yourself. As a teacher, I'd noticed that nobody ever grows up in a group.

"I wrote my first line of fiction on May 24th, 1971 -- after seventh period. I'd quit my teaching job that day, liberated at last from my tenure and hospitalization. At first, I wrote with my own students in mind. Shortly, I noticed that while I was growing older every minute at the typewriter, my readers remained mysteriously the same age. For inspiration, I now travel about sixty thousand miles a year, on the trail of the young. Now, I never start a novel until some young reader, somewhere, gives me the necessary nudge..

"In an age when hardly more than half my readers live in the same homes as their fathers, I was moved to write Father Figure. In it a teenaged boy who has played the father-figure role to his little brother is threatened when they are both reunited with the father they hardly know. It's a novel like so many of our novels that moves from anger to hope in situations to convince young readers that novels can be about them...

"I wrote Are You in the House Alone? when I learned that the typical victim of our fastest growing, least-reported crime, rape, is a teenager -- one of my own readers, perhaps. It's not a novel to tell young readers what rape is. They already know that. It's meant to portray a character who must become something more than a victim in our judicial system that defers to the criminal...

"Two of my latest attempts to keep pace with the young are a comedy called Lost in Cyberspace and its sequel, The Great Interactive Dream Machine. Like a lot of adults, I noticed that twelve year olds are already far more computer-literate than I will ever be. As a writer, I could create a funny story on the subject, but I expect young readers will be more attracted to it because it is also a story about two friends having adventures together. There's a touch of time travel in it, too, cybernetically speaking, for those readers who liked sharing Blossom Culp's exploits. And the setting is New York, that magic place I dreamed of when I was young in Decatur, Illinois..."

More About Richard Peck

Richard Peck has written over twenty novels, and in the process has become one of America's most highly respected writers for young adults. A versatile writer, he is beloved by middle graders as well as young adults for his mysteries and coming-of-age novels. He now lives in New York City. In addition to writing, he spends a great deal of time traveling around the country attending speaking engagements at conferences, schools and libraries...

Mr. Peck has won a number of major awards for the body of his work, including the Margaret A. Edwards Award from School Library Journal, the National Council of Teachers of English/ALAN Award, and the 1991 Medallion from the University of Southern Mississippi. Virtually every publication and association in the field of children's literature has recommended his books, including Mystery Writers of America which twice gave him their Edgar Allan Poe Award. Dial Books for Young Readers is honored to welcome Richard Peck to its list with Lost in Cyberspace and its sequel The Great Interactive Dream Machine...

School Library Journal

(August 1, 2004; 1-4000-8626-4)

Gr 7 Up-Richard Peck turns his talents to historical fiction with this book (Dial, 2003), and it is unusual both in its subject matter as well as in the dual story line. Daniel Passer opens the narration as Howard Leland Hutchings, a teenager on a somewhat mysterious visit to his father's family in southern Illinois in 1916. Passing reference is made to his mother's discomfort with her husband's relatives, but its significance is not revealed until the end of the story. After the four people who raised Howard's father are introduced, the scene shifts to 1861 and 15-year-old Tillie Pruitt, and Lina Patel takes over the narration of the story of the Civil War and its impact on a family living in the region popularly called Egypt- the southern part of the state right along the Mississippi River. Two New Orleans ladies arrive in town just as war is threatening to close the river to traffic. The enigmatic relationship between the two enralls Tillie and her family. Patel delivers the various parts vivaciously and convincingly, although her very cultured and crystalline voice contrasts with the local dialect that is occasionally used. Many secrets are slowly revealed, but the essential one doesn't emerge until the story shifts back to 1916, Passer resumes the narration, and Howard learns about his father's heritage. This unusual format is handled deftly by both outstanding narrators. Peck's exceptional grip on character development will please his fans. The novel explores a little-known aspect of the Civil War that will interest middle and high school listeners.-Jane P. A boy's grandmother recounts the story of her teenage years, when a steamboat brought two strangers to Grand Tower, Illinois--glamorous Delphine and her companion Calinda. The townspeople think these "Secesh gals" may be Confederate spies but the truth is far more complicated. The harsh realities of war are honestly related in the always surprising plot. Fifteen-year-old Howard travels by car in 1916 with his father and young twin brothers from St. Louis to the tiny town of Grand Tower in southern Illinois to visit Howard's paternal grandparents. Through Howard's telling, readers sense that Grand Tower contains some interesting family history, possibly even a scandal. When Howard sits to reflect, the narration is passed to his grandmother Tillie, recalling her 1861 teenage years old in 1861. The effects of the Civil War are juxtaposing Grand Tower and Tillie's twin brothers. Mark Peck has to join the

Pat Conroy (b. 1945)

Printable Version

Pat Conroy

Contemporary southern author Pat Conroy has written a number of highly popular books, including The Water Is Wide, The Great Santini, The Lords of Discipline, The Prince of Tides, and Beach Music. Conroy also has achieved considerable success as a screenwriter. He is the author or coauthor of several Hollywood and television scripts, most notably the film adaptations of his own novels, the Prince of Tides and Beach Music.

Life and Career

Donald Patrick Conroy was born in Atlanta on October 26, 1945, the eldest of seven children of Donald Conroy, a career U.S. Marine Corps pilot from Chicago, and Frances "Peggy" Peek Conroy, described by her son as "a north-Georgia beauty full of love and beauty." Conroy credits his mother for instilling in him a love of language and literature.

Another early literary influence on Conroy was Eugene Norris, a high school English teacher who gave Conroy a copy of Thomas Wolfe's Look Homeward, Angel and also drove the young student to Asheville, North Carolina, to visit Wolfe's home. From that time on Wolfe served as the literary model for Conroy. Like Wolfe's, Conroy's fiction is characterized by a lyrical, emotionally charged prose, a heavy reliance on personal and family experiences, and a strong sense of place.

A "military brat," Conroy moved with his family

Title: MARIJUANA: THE PUBLIC WANTS TO DRAG THE CAMEL INTO THE TENT, By: Miara, Jim, Alcoholism & Drug Abuse Weekly, 1042-1394, February 10, 1997, Vol. 9, Issue 6

MARIJUANA: THE PUBLIC WANTS TO DRAG THE CAMEL INTO THE TENT

The controversy over medical marijuana referenda in California and Arizona differs from the usual confrontations between drug-issue traditionalists and their opponents mainly because it has drawn in ordinary citizens who until now have been content to sit on the sidelines.

Now that John and Jane Q. Public are watching, both sides in the debate have been forced to defend their positions, and neither has done a particularly good job. Part of the problem is that both sides seem intent on obscuring the fundamental issue with superficial statements.

The debate over whether or not to prescribe marijuana to relieve the pain of terminally ill patients is no debate at all. No one in their heart of hearts opposes this. There is no rational reason to deny people who are dying anything, whether it's a morphine cocktail or a toké on a marijuana weed.

A similarly misguided debate involves marijuana's medicinal benefits. If after rigorous scientific tests are performed marijuana is found to have a medicinal benefit, then it should be included in doctors' pharmacological arsenal. If tests show it is harmful, then certainly doctors will not prescribe it. Virtually everyone, including drug czar Barry McCaffrey, now agrees on this.

So if the debate is not about dispensing marijuana to the terminally ill or studying its medicinal potential, what is it about? Why is the issue appearing on the cover of Newsweek?

The answer is clear: The government's sledge-hammer response to the votes in California and Arizona was so out of balance that it jolted the public to attention. And when people began to look more closely, they discovered that the marijuana dispute was just the camel's nose peeking under the tent. The public now wants to drag the rest of the beast inside to take a good look at it.

When Arizona and California voters passed the medical-use referenda, the response from federal and state officials was startlingly harsh. Voters were duped by a national legalization conspiracy, these officials charged, ignoring the fact that government heavy-hitters also had spent much time and money presenting their case.

Government officials then threatened to prosecute doctors who prescribe marijuana for their patients. The public perceived this not only as a challenge to the will of California and Arizona voters, but as an insult to the integrity of medical professionals who devote their lives to curing illness and alleviating pain.

In an editorial entitled "Federal Foolishness and Marijuana," which appeared in the January issue of the New England Journal of Medicine, journal editor Jerome Kassirer, M.D., took government hardliners to task. He wrote, "I believe that a federal policy that prohibits physicians from alleviating suffering by prescribing marijuana for seriously ill patients is misguided, heavy-handed and inhumane."

Abstract (Article Summary)

When it comes to load funds, long-term investors should purchase Class A shares, despite their front-end sales charges. Over time, they will cost less than Class B or C shares, which have higher annual expenses. Ten of the best load funds include: 1. Calamos Growth, 2. Eaton Vance Worldwide Health Sciences, 3. EuroPacific Growth, and 4. FPA Capital. Over the past 3, 10 and 15 years, FPA Capital ranked in the top 10% of funds that specialize in under-valued stocks of small companies. It earned an annualized 18% over the past 10, 15 and 20 years. Part of the Franklin Templeton group, the Mutual Discovery load fund combines superior returns with low risk. Over the past 5 and 10 years, it returned an annualized 12% and 13%, respectively - with one-third less volatility than the D&S&P 500. Except for 2002, when the fund fell 9%, it has never lost more than 2% in any year since its 1993 inception.

[Headnote]

If you work with an adviser, part of YOUR NEST EGG may be in funds that carry up-front fees. Are they as good as these?

KIPLINGER'S HAS LONG championed no-load mutual funds, the ones sold directly to investors with no up-front fees or commissions. The reason we favor them over load funds is very simple: We like the fact that if you invest $1,000, the full $1,000 goes to work for you. Buy a fund with a 5.75% load, on the other hand, and $57.50 of your money goes to pay someone for selling you the fund. And that leaves just $942.50 in your

Tallulah Falls and Gorge

Located in the mountains of northeast Georgia, Tallulah Falls rose to prominence as a resort area in the late nineteenth century. Early in the twentieth century, after a fierce struggle with conservationists led by Helen Dortch Longstreet, the Georgia Power Company dammed the falls and constructed a large hydroelectric facility at the site. Georgia Power and the state of Georgia teamed to establish the Tallulah Gorge State Park, and thousands of Georgians once again visit the area annually.

Tallulah Falls was actually a series of four main cataracts and several smaller rapids that dropped approximately 350 feet over the course of a mile. After gathering speed through the Indian Arrow Rapids at the head of the falls, the Tallulah River raced down L'Eau d'Or, a forty-six-foot-tall cataract. Tempesta, estimated at eighty-one feet, was the second fall, followed by the largest cataract, Hurricane, which dropped ninety-six feet. Oceana, approximately a forty-two-foot drop, was the final major falls. The gorge through which the river cut created steep cliffs and rock outcroppings that provided excellent observation points and added to the scenic beauty of the falls.

It's your choice: Bake Mom's Pecan Pie with pecan halves to make a beautiful first impression, or use chopped pecans for easy cutting.

PICTURE-PERFECT PIE

To prevent the filling from seeping under the crust, our recipes call for using two crusts and stacking them. Here's how.

1. Unfold one piecrust and press out fold lines.
2. Unfold second crust and stack on top, turning so that fold lines do not match. Press edges to seal.
3. Roll crust out to an approximate 12-inch circle. Fit into a 9-inch pieplate. Trim dough to about 1/2 inch from edge of pieplate, fold under, and flute or crimp as desired.
